About our speakers

Allison Exall is chair of the firm's environmental practice. Her practice encompasses all aspects of environmental law. Ms. Exall advises industrial and manufacturing clients on permitting, enforcement and compliance issues. She represents clients in environmental litigation, including private party litigation as well as before the Department of Justice, Environmental Protection Agency and state and local environmental agencies. She advises corporate and real estate clients on environmental issues in transactions. Ms. Exall's experience includes issues involving the Clean Air Act, the Clean Water Act, the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act, the Endangered Species Act, Superfund, brownfields redevelopment, environmental bankruptcy issues, clean coal technology, climate change and sustainability.

Craig Pritzlaff concentrates his practice on environmental law. Craig understands that resolving environmental matters is often costly and time consuming. However, his strong technical background and experience working with governmental agencies has proven invaluable in helping clients develop cost effective solutions to environmental problems.

About the Environmental Group

CTT's environmental lawyers represent leading public and private sector clients in connection with regulatory and compliance matters and environmental litigation. Drawing on direct, comprehensive experience in enforcement and litigation matters, our lawyers consistently deliver innovative, common-sense solutions to the environmental challenges facing companies.

Curran Tomko Tarski LLP

In today's complicated business and legal climate, clients need attorneys who provide practical advice to complex legal issues. We routinely represent large, established corporations; middle-market companies; family-owned businesses; private investors and start-ups. For our clients that do not have an in-house legal team, our firm often serves as the outside legal department. In this role, our attorneys provide advice and counsel on day-to-day business operations and risk management strategies.
