Freedom was high on everyone's list of priorities once the Louisiana Purchase had been added to the United States. Some sought financial freedom, or freedom so they could do what made them happy. Westward expansion paved the way for freedoms of all kinds.

The original thirteen colonies were nestled along the Atlantic coast in the east. However, by 1890 the country had expanded across the continent. Thirteen colonies were now 44 states. Many Americans believed that it was the country's destiny to spread from the Atlantic to the Pacific. People believed that the expansion of their country could only be a good thing. The phrase 'Manifest Destiny' was used to identify this idea. People believed that they should spread their influence over the North American continent.

Four major events led to expansion west; Louisiana Purchase, California Gold Rush, Transcontinental Railroad and Oregon Trail.
