JAMESTOWN COLONY

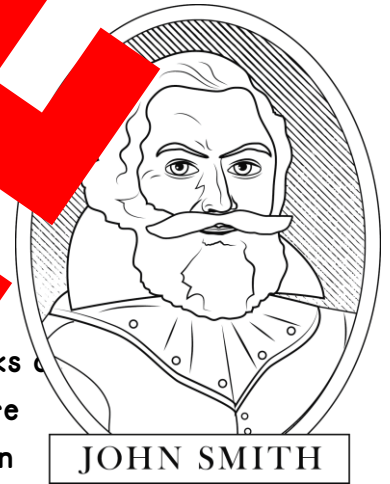

King James I of England financed an expedition to establish a new colony in North America. The king hoped that this new colony would prevent Spain from claiming new land. He also wanted to be the first country to find a sailing route to Asia. The king gave approval for businessmen, called the Virginia Company, to explore and settle. In 1606, King James I gave the Virginia Company the charter to establish a colony. The Virginia Company was financed by private investors who expected a return on their investment. They expected to find gold in the New World. They also expected to make money by growing and making things in the new colony that they could export to England.

The crew set sail on December 20, 1606 and the journey took four months. The expedition included 144 men. The ships were named the Susan Constant and the Discovery. Captain Christopher Newport was in charge of the three ships. The three ships first sailed to the Canary Islands. They then landed in Puerto Rico for fresh food and water. From there, the ships headed north and landed at Cape Henry in Virginia on April 26, 1607.

They landed near the Chesapeake Bay area on the banks of the James River. After landing in Virginia, the English settlers were attacked by a Native American tribe. They realized that the men were using their land. The settlers knew they needed a defense so they built a triangular shaped fort to defend themselves from all directions. They named the new area Jamestown in honor of King James I of England. Jamestown was the first permanent English settlement in North America. Edward Wingfield was the colony's first governor. He allowed the men to search for gold instead of establishing a settlement.

The settlers had a difficult time in Jamestown. The climate and soil were different than England. The location of Jamestown was chosen because settlers felt they could easily defend it against potential attacks. In the long run, the site chosen for the fort later proved to be a bad choice. The settlers arrived in late summer and were unable to plant crops to have food to eat. Over the next months, the land turned into swampy, poisonous waters full of mosquitoes. In the winter, there was no protection from the harsh weather elements. Jamestown was established in the middle of the Powhatan territory. Powhatan was a tributary of the Powhatan tribe. This led to many conflicts with Native Americans. Some settlers were killed or kidnapped by the Powhatan tribe.

Many of the Jamestown settlers were businessmen that lacked basic survival skills such as fishing, hunting or farming. The first few years were very rough for the new settlers.
