LOST COLONY OF ROANOKE

Roanoke Colony was England's first attempt to establish a new colony in the Americas. Unfortunately, English settlers mysteriously disappeared and the colony is often referred to as the "Lost Colony". The colonists disappeared during the Anglo-Spanish War, leaving very little clues as to what happened.

In 1584, Queen Elizabeth I granted the land of Virginia to Sir Walter Raleigh. England wanted to establish a colony on Roanoke Island as an attempt to expand the British Empire in the New World. This charter specifically stated that Raleigh must establish a North American colony or he would lose his right to colonization.

Raleigh sent Captain Amada and Captain Barlowe to explore the new area. The explorers reached Roanoke Island off the coast of North Carolina on July 1st, 1584. At that time, the land was considered a part of Virginia. The men mapped the area, decided it would be a good area to colonize and then returned back to England.

Sir Richard Greenville led the first expedition to Roanoke Island in 1585. The expedition arrived at Roanoke about one year after Amada and Barlowe looked for places to settle a colony.

In Roanoke, Greenville left his male settlers under the charge of Ralph Lane. Greenville returned to England to gather supplies for the settlement.

The settlers built a fort but still struggled to survive. During their exploration of the coast, the Europeans blamed local Native Americans for stealing a silver cup. As revenge, the settlers burned their village ruining relations with the locals.

The supplies did not arrive as planned and so many of the colonists headed back to England with Sir Francis Drake. Eventually, Greenville returned to Roanoke Island but found that it was deserted. Greenville left some men on the island once again and returned to England a second time for supplies.
