Paul Revere was an American patriot and silversmith who played a crucial role in the American Revolution. He is best known for his midnight ride on April 18, 1775, warning the American colonists that British troops were on their way to Massachusetts.

Revere was born in Boston on January 1, 1735. He was the second of 12 children in the family. At 13, Revere became an apprentice to his father to learn the silversmith trade.

In 1754, Revere's father passed away and Paul was forced to take over the family business. In the shop, he engraved metal, made surgical instruments, and sold spectacles, silverware and tea sets. During tough times, Revere would clean teeth. Paul was an excellent horse rider and also carried messages between Boston, New York, and Philadelphia. After returning from a short time in the army for the French and Indian War, Revere married Sarah Orne.
