BATTLE OF BUNKER HILL

The Battle of Bunker Hill followed the Battles of Lexington and Concord during the Revolutionary War.

The city of Boston was under control of the King of Britain and was filled with British troops. Many colonists disliked the king's laws, the taxes they were forced to pay, and the presence of British soldiers. A growing movement began the urge to become an independent country. The British army was well trained and one of the strongest armies in the world.

The Battle of Bunker Hill was a significant battle during the Siege of Boston. The Battle of Bunker Hill took place in 1775. The battle was fought on Breed's Hill and Bunker Hill in Charlestown, Massachusetts just a few months after the start of the Revolutionary War. Most of the battle was actually fought on Breed's Hill. The British mistakenly thought that Breed's Hill was Bunker Hill, hence the name the Battle of Bunker Hill.

The Massachusetts Congress found out that British commanders were making plans to capture Dorchester and Charlestown. The American colonists decided to build fortified defenses on Bunker Hill. They were Commanded by General Prescott. 1200 militiamen worked on fortifications (a defensive wall) on top of Breed's Hill.

Boston was surrounded by water on three sides and the American Continental army was on the fourth side.

The British heard that the colonists had cannons and did not want to risk losing their ships. The British were trying to gain control of the city of Boston, the seaports and the surrounding land.

Prescott, Putnam, James Frye, and Ebenezer Bridge led the Colonial forces. The leaders argued over where to put their defenses. Breed's Hill overlooked Boston and the Charlestown Peninsula. Some defenses were built on Bunker Hill, but most of the work was done on Breed's Hill. Breed's Hill was closer to Boston and believed to be a better location.

The British planned to take over two hills to gain a strategic advantage. American forces got word of the British plans and went to defend the hills. The British soldiers, or Redcoats, were led by General William Howe and Brigadier General Robert Pigot. British soldiers thought the Minutemen, the American militia, was a group of poor farmers with old muskets and no experience. The Redcoats were armed with muskets and bayonets and far outnumbered [100, ...
