The Articles of Confederation provided a firm written set of rules for the government of the 13 states. The Founding Fathers were concerned about a government that was too powerful. The founding fathers did not want to create a government that was out of touch and too powerful. Having just come out of the Revolutionary War, they were afraid of being ruled by another foreign government, like Britain. The hope was to create a federal (national) government with just the right amount of power. They wanted it to be powerful enough to be effective but not excessively powerful.

A committee of thirteen men from the Second Continental Congress prepared the document. The Articles of Confederation were submitted to the states for ratification (approval) in 1777, but the process dragged on for several more years.

The Articles of Confederation was only 5 pages long and included 13 articles. In order for the Articles of Confederation to become official all thirteen states had to agree. Virginia was the first state to agree in 1777 while Maryland was the last in 1781.

Article I gave the new states the name of "United States of America."

Article II said that each government still had their own powers not listed in the document.

Article V gave one vote to each state.

Article VI stated that the central government was in charge of foreign relations, such as declaring war, but that each state must maintain a militia (trained soldiers).

Other articles included how the document could be changed, paying for war debts, defense, and choosing military leaders.

Shays' Rebellion was a major event that showed how the Articles of Confederation were failing. The rebellion happened between August 1786 and January 1787. The leader of the rebellion was Daniel Shays.

The country was having economic problems and people could not pay their bills and taxes. They were losing their own possessions, even farms, and some were put in jail for debt (money they owed). This caused an armed revolt (rising) against the government. The federal government was so weak and poor that it could not stop the rebellion. Local and state militia stopped the rebellion. The federal government did little to aid with the rebellion because they could not offer help. Thus, many understood that the federal government needed change.
