In 1215, England's King John had gotten himself into a bad spot with the rest of his country, as well as France. England and France had lots of military skirmishes in the late 1100s and early 1200s and France seemed to come out the winner of most of those battles. There was a lot of money that went into those battles. When England lost territory to France's King Philip II, the English barons were not happy about the heavy taxes they were forced by the king to pay.

A baron was given his land directly from the king. These powerful nobles ruled large areas of land called fiefs. In return for the king's protection and land rights, the barons would pay him with soldiers and taxes. A baron's job was to maintain an army that was at the king's service when needed. If the barons did not have an army, they could be taxed by the king. This tax was called shield money.
