DANIEL BOONE

Daniel Boone was likely born in October 1734 or November 1734 in Pennsylvania. No one knows his exact birthdate. Boone was raised in a Quaker home. Quakers in Pennsylvania were free to believe what they wanted and believed in peace.

Boone's father was a blacksmith and farmer. Daniel helped around the family farm by chopping wood and tending to the cows. His mother taught him how to read and write.

In his teenage years, Boone received his first rifle and began hunting bear, fox, wild turkey, beaver, and deer. Daniel would hunt for days at a time, becoming the main hunter for the family.

Boone befriended the local Delaware Native Americans who taught him survival skills in the woods. The skills included tracking animal prints, trapping, and hunting animals. Soon Daniel began to dress like the local Natives.

In 1751, Daniel and his family moved to North Carolina when he was fifteen years old. The Boones bought 1,300 acres of land. Daniel hunted animals and sold their skins to help his family. He went to the fur market to sell the pelts of the wild game. Eventually, Boone gained a reputation for the best sharpshooter in the land after winning any contest he entered.

The French and Indian War began in 1754. Daniel decided to join the British army as a blacksmith and wagon driver. The French and Indian War was the British colonies versus an alliance of the French and the Indians. The French encouraged the Cherokees to attack American homesteads.

The British forces were easily defeated at the Battle of the Monongahela. Boone's British Commander, General Edward Braddock, was mortally wounded. Due to his extensive survival skills, Boone was able to escape death.

In 1769, Boone was on an expedition to Kentucky with other men, including John Findley. Findley was a frontier trader who Daniel met during the French and Indian War. Findley told Boone about land west of
