In 1215, England's King John had gotten himself into a bad spot with the rest of his country as well as France. England and France had lots of military skirmishes in the late 1100s and early 1200s and France seemed to come out the winner of most of those battles. There was a lot of money that went into those battles. When England lost territory to France's King Philip II, the English barons were not happy about the heavy taxes they were forced by the king to pay.
