

READING #4

MEXICO: In many Spanish countries, Halloween is known as “El Día de los Muertos” or the Day of the Dead. The Day of the Dead celebration begins on October 31st. Families remember and honor those who have passed away. Families set up altars with flowers, bread, candy and pictures of family members. Those who celebrate also use colorful images of skeletons and skulls as a way to make people feel more comfortable with death.

GERMANY: In Germany, Halloween is referred to as Walpurgisnacht and is celebrated in April. Walpurgisnacht is also known as “the witches sabbath.” Children dress up and trick-or-treat in their neighborhoods. Witches are commonly portrayed in German woodcuttings and paintings with long skirts, capes, broomsticks and pointy hats. Witches, ghosts and ghouls are the most common costumes. An old German tradition involves hiding any knives in the house to prevent the returning spirits from harm.
