Years after his death, which is believed to have been March 17th, 461, the Irish people began celebrating St. Patrick's Day. It became a day of celebration with family and neighbors. The first celebrations are said to have taken place in the 9th or 10th century. St. Patrick's Day did not become a public holiday in Ireland until 1904. The first parade held in honor of St. Patrick's Day was not actually hosted in Ireland. The first parade on record in the history books was organized by a Catholic priest from Ireland named Ricardo Artur. On March 17, 1601, he organized a parade in the colony that is now St. Augustine, Florida. The tradition of wearing green dates back to the Irish Rebellion. Irish soldiers wore green as they fought off the British in red uniforms. They were attempting to overthrow British rule in Ireland but were unsuccessful.
