Thomas Jefferson sent Lewis and Clark to explore and map the wild west. Then came westward expansion and the Oregon, Santa Fe, and California Trails. Many settlers traveled west wanting gold, riches, and adventure. Some railroads were already built but tracks were different sizes, so nothing was connected. A transcontinental railroad discussion began in 1830 with Asa Whitney. Transcontinental means across a continent.

Wagons were a risky way to travel, roads were made of dirt and the journey lasted several months. If a train was able to carry settlers West, more people could make the journey quicker with less work and hardship.

In 1830, the steam train was introduced in the United States. The steam engine was a great new way to travel long distances, and it seemed like a much better way than wagons. What the country needed was a railroad track to get them there.
