The battle that started the Revolutionary War was the Battle of Lexington and Concord on April 19, 1775. The British army wanted to capture rebel leaders Samuel Adams and John Hancock. Although this was just a small fight, it was considered the first battle. The British army was ordered to go to Lexington to capture the rebels and seize weapons in Concord. The colonists were warned by Paul Revere that the British army was on the way, giving time for Adams and Hancock to leave the area. When the British Army arrived, there were only about 80 Americans ready to fight while there was a whole army of British soldiers. The British army was led by Major John Pitcairn and the American army was led by Captain John Parker. While they stood against each other, a shot was fired, although it is not clear whether it was the British or the Americans. This was the first shot of the war and was called "shot heard around the world".
